History of the New Harmony Inn

Throughout the town, you see a variety of homes and buildings that relate to the story of how this town began and developed starting with the Harmonist Community that came here to what was wilderness at the time.

Jane Blaffer Owen came here to this town first on her honeymoon in 1941 and immediately saw the insurmountable amount of unique history that deserves to be preserved. Yet she had also captured the spirit of what this town's purpose had been, which is to enlighten, educate, empower, and inspire humankind into reaching for more.

The New Harmony Inn was a natural progression from everything else she was preserving and contributing to this town. She had a keen business sense along with her enthusiasm to share this unique town with others. Hospitality is the foundation of how to convey to those who come to visit and experience the many attributes of New Harmony.

After the success of the Red Geranium Restaurant which opened in 1964, the New Harmony Inn was opened in 1974. She chose architect Evans Woolen from Indianapolis to design the Entry House and the Rosebank building. He had studied under Philip Johnson who designed the Roofless Church for Mrs. Owen here in New Harmony. Due to the need to accommodate more visitors to this community, in the 1980's she also had the Conference Center and the Riverbend building erected as well.

Today the Inn still provides a place for visitors to relax, celebrate an important event, or provide inspiration and healing. Even though Jane Owen passed away in 2010 her spirit still lives throughout this town and especially here at the New Harmony Inn. Jane Owen once said, "I'm passionate about New Harmony. I'm like a bride coming back to her beloved, each time I return." Her ambition to share this with others is found here at the New Harmony Inn and it is what this place still strives for with each guest that stays here.
