A BRIEF HISTORY OF GERMAN VILLAGE

Economic depression and revolutionary turmoil in Europe sent many German refugees to America in the nineteenth century. A vast number of these refugees settled on Columbus' south side. This new German settlement was composed of people who brought their heritage and lifestyle from the old country. During World War I and II, anti-German sentiment sent the area into economic despair. Prohibition brought German Village breweries to a standstill, and this added to the gradual decay of the area

By 1960, the entire area was a vast slum and in that year a non-profit organization was formed - The German Village Society - "whose members have dedicated themselves to the preservation and restoration of the property in the German Village area and to the retention of it's charm and unique old world atmosphere." City council declared the village a historical area and created the German Village Commission to oversee architectural restoration. The result is the German Village of today which is one of the largest privately-funded restored historical area in the United States.

The real estate of the area is now among the most valuable in the city of Columbus. There are over 4,000 residents in German Village. Restoration is continuing and property value in the area continues to rise under the shadows of downtown Columbus' expanding skyline. The area has been responsible for bringing many visitors to central Ohio. Some come to inspect the renovation, some to enjoy the shops and restaurants, and others just to stroll the quiet streets and view the quaint and lovely gardens. Whatever the reason for your visit, we hope you enjoy German Village.
